Scout News

Dominion Field Commissioner Evans McCormick, of Ottawa, paid a return visit here on last Thursday and conducted the work of the Cubs and Scouts for the evening. He expressed his satisfaction at the reorganization and said that they were now ready to go ahead and no doubt do splendid work.

Meeting night for the Boy Scouts has been changed from Friday to Thursday, commencing tonight.

Scoutmaster DeMann reports that the troupe is getting down to real work and good enthusiasm is being shown, however there is room for a few new members and he would be glad to see any boys who are interested.

Mr. Carlton Leeson has offered his assistance to the Scouts and will probably take over the position of Assistant Scoutmaster.

The Cubs under the leadership of Chas. Geiger and Chas. Mortimer are getting in shape and the young stars are quite enthusiastic. There will be about 20 boys in the pack. Cub master Ivor Parker of the 10th Pack, North Hill, Calgary, was at meeting on Tuesday last and gave the boys a good start in their work.

Tungsten Refined Here Is A Metal More Precious Than Gold For War Work

(By Bruce West)

War in the Pacific has suddenly made Ottawa the home of one of the country's most important ore refineries.

Surprising as this may be to those who have always looked upon the capital as a centre of government rather than a mining city, it possesses the only plant in Canada which refines tungsten, a metal more precious than gold to the war factories of the country.

Tungsten is used as a hardening agent in the manufacture of fine tool steel. Canada and the United States have always obtained a large portion of their supply from far-off China. Concentrates of the metal were shipped across the Pacific after being trucked over the long haul down the Burma Road.

The metal is refined from an ore called scheelite. Although no large deposits have so far been found in Canada, occasional bits crop up with the ore mined in the gold fields.

Some months ago Canada's Bureau of Mines decided it could make an important contribution to the country's war effort if it gleaned these scheelite fragments and milled them into tungsten concentrates for the tool steel industry.

The Bureau has a small but very modern refining plant, normally used for processing large bulk ore samples. This mill was utilized for an experiment that has already provided the tool steel factories of Canada with more than 30 tons of tungsten concentrates.

Considering that a comparatively small amount of the metal is required for each ton of steel, every pound milled by the Bureau's refinery is a valuable asset to the Canadian war effort.

Scheelite is a buff colored ore that often gives no hint of its tungsten content when viewed under ordinary light. But when it is subjected to the beam of an ultra violet ray lamp the tungsten in the rock gives off a fluorescent glow that is a tell-tale sign of the mineral's presence.

The mines which supply the scheelite sort it by hand from the gold ore. A conveyor carries the ore beneath a violet ray lamp and the sorter picks out the chunks that glow with flakes or strips of tungsten. When a car load has been gleaned by this method, it is shipped to the Ottawa refinery.

The gold mines do this work on a patriotic basis. Because the smallness of the deposits makes it necessary to sort the scheelite by hand and freight it to Ottawa, they actually lose money on it.

Now that war with Japan has made the wide Pacific a particularly hazardous gap between the factories of Canada and the tungsten deposits of China, a new type of prospector will soon be tramping the wilderness, armed with his violet ray lamp. These are now being made in portable form for the express purpose of tracking down the precious scheelite and wolframite, another tungsten-bearing ore.

The Bureau of Mines, anxious to encourage the search for the vital war metal, has offered its aid to all who wish to go prospecting for it. It is ready to put its testing equipment and scientific knowledge at the disposal of any one who wishes to submit samples or obtain advice.

Most of the tungsten milled by the Bureau of Mines comes from the Porcupine area of North Ontario. Mines in British Columbia have also sent shipments of scheelite to Ottawa. Some samples containing tungsten have been sent from the Yukon, scene of the great gold rush of yesterday.

If the mineral is found in sufficient quantities, a mill may be set up at some central point in the North to reduce freight charges. In the meantime, the Bureau of Mines in Ottawa carries on the job that has already helped to place thousands of additional tools in the hands of Canada's workmen.

Because a crucifix used to hang there, it is etiquette for all ranks in the British navy to salute the quarterdeck.

Alberta Oil Wells

Geologists Disclose Possible Oil-Bearing Structures In Foothills

Reporting on the results of field work in the foothills of Alberta during 1941, the Department of Mines and Resources advises that its geologists have mapped several structures which appear to have possibilities as sources of crude petroleum in commercial quantities. The work was undertaken with special reference to the steadily increasing wartime demands for petroleum products and was carried out in the Marble Mountain, Dyson Creek, and Wawa areas. The three areas lie outside the Turner Valley field, which is also in the foothills and which is the source of most of Canada's output of crude petroleum. In each of the areas, structures regarded as being worthy of testing were disclosed.

The extension from the south of one such structure, known as the Stafne Ridge anticline, was traced northwestwards into the Marble Mountain area for an approximate distance of eight miles. Evidence of another possibly favourable structure was found in the strata on James River. The oil possibilities of these structures depend largely upon whether or not the formation containing the main oil-producing horizon of Turner Valley is present in the cores of the folds. Outcrops of this formation in the Marble Mountain area are numerous and contain several highly porous beds which hold residues of petroleum.

Two structures, each about 15 miles in length, were disclosed in the western part of the Dyson Creek area, the more westerly of which is regarded as being worthy of testing. Several structures of sufficient size and closure to be potential oil fields were outlined in the Wawa area, lying between Jasper and Red Deer, and the folds are believed to have cores of the oil-bearing limestone. One structure, several miles east of the Home Brazeau well appears to have excellent possibilities, but the wells would be from 6,000 to 9,000 feet deep, depending upon the drilling sites chosen.

New Age Of Travel

Passengers Use The Airways To Cross The Seas

You "clipper" now across the oceans that you once only sailed over. This frequency in flying the oceans has brought "clippering" into ordinary use. The phrase is not to be despised as counterfeit coinage, but has to be accepted as fitting the new age in travel.

With only one or two eminent exceptions, few foreign personages reach Washington or New York, or go to London, who have not "clippered" across the oceans. M. Litvinov was reported as "clippering" across the Pacific to San Francisco to take his post as Soviet ambassador at Washington, and the list of notables who have deplaned at La Guardia airport in the last eight months would fill a Who's Who of allied and associated leaders in the war. The five thousand passengers flown over the Atlantic alone would have multiplied into tens of thousands if accommodation could have been found for them.

"Clippering" is not an innovation in slang but is the theme-word of ocean transport by air come into common use. People still embark, entrain and embus, and with staggering increases still emplane to fly over the continent, but they are "clippering" between Europe and the Orient. —Winnipeg Free Press.

Price To Be Paid

One wonders if the German people are doomed to go on forever learning nothing from experience. The Kaiser thought democracy would go to pieces in the last war, and it cost the lives of 3,500,000 Germans to show him his error. How much will it cost the Third Reich?

Demand for Canadian fresh water fish is constantly increasing in the United States.

Italians Driven Out

Loss Control Of Vast District West Of Egypt

Whatever the fate of their North African empire following the peace, the Italians will be denied domination over the Senussi of Cyrenaica, Foreign Minister Anthony Eden told the House of Commons.

The statement seemed to imply that the Italians would not be allowed control over the hinterland of Cyrenaica, that vast district directly west of Egypt, which has been conquered during the British offensive.

During the past generation, while the Italians were securing their conquest of this territory, the Senussi have been special victims of their wrath. At one time there was open war all over the territory back of the coastal district, and later, when the Senussi had been beaten in open battle the Italians systematically browned them. Marshal Rodolfo Graziani earned his nickname of Butcher by the manner in which he slaughtered them. He is credited with having many of their captured chieftains dropped on native encampments from airplanes to impress their followers.

The Senussi are one of the most austere of the Moslem sects and accustomed to wander over most of North Africa. Before the present war the Italians attempted to hinder their movements by constructing a great barbed wire barrier along the Egyptian Libyan frontier. The Senussi have helped the British consistently during the North African fighting by raiding Italian camps, capturing arms and fighting other Arabs who were assisting the Italians.

A statement explained that Sayid Idris El Sinussi, leader of the sect, had made contact with the British in Egypt within a month of France's collapse, and that his followers subsequently rendered valuable aid during the campaign of 1940-41, and the later offensive.

A Rare Species

Black Beaver To Be Propagated In Manitoba Areas

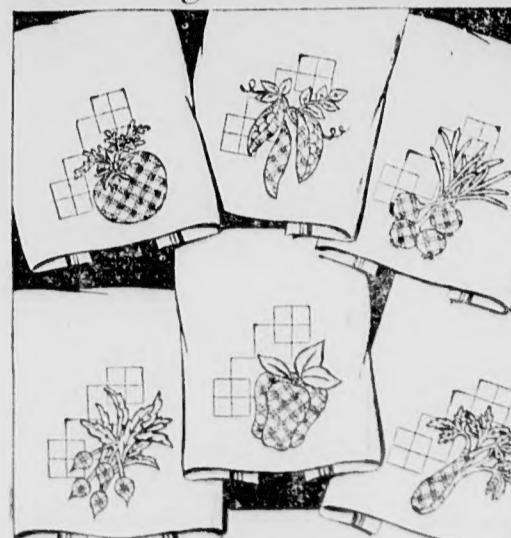

Action has been taken by the Manitoba department of natural resources to make black beaver, now one of the rarest species of beaver in the province, an important source of fur production.

Hon. J. S. McDiarmid, minister of natural resources, said that department officials had found black beaver after months of searching in an isolated region in far northern Manitoba. These beaver were captured and carried by airplane to the 500,000-acre Fisher River fur development project west of Lake Winnipeg. Superior specimens will be used for breeding purposes to ensure continued fur production, the minister said.

Charwomen Of London Are Honored For Their Courage And Endurance

Progress Of Soil Surveying

Over Ten Million Acres Were Surveyed In 1941

With the object of obtaining reliable information regarding the extent and nature of the different soils in Canada the Dominion and Provincial Departments of Agriculture and the Agricultural colleges have been jointly conducting soil surveys in most of the provinces for several years. In the summer of 1941 about 20 field parties, with two men to each party, were engaged on this work.

The amount of work done by the soil surveyors can be judged to some extent by the area of land surveyed.

During 1941 this amounted to slightly over ten million acres. They called them "London's Pride" as they sat in their simple finery to receive the plaudits of a King, a Prince, an Admiral and a Cabinet Minister for doing their jobs while London burned and the silt and smoke and dust of 1,000 fires sifted through every window and covered every doorstep.

For official recognition had come at last to the indomitable charwomen of London, "foes of dirt and foes of Hitler," who were being honored in the same way as other heroes and heroines of bombing, wardens, firemen, stretcher bearers, first aid workers and policemen had been honored before them.

They were brought together in a West End theatre to see a show, a musical comedy hit of the season—to give them a good time and tell them that people haven't forgotten. As Home Secretary Herbert Morrison said that "in the thousand and one deeds that have helped to save London, her charwomen have played a famous part."

There were 1,700 of these women whose work each day is well under way before the average man or woman is out of bed. Chosen by ballot, they represented more than 30,000 colleagues in government offices and the 95 town halls in the London Civil Defence region. They were guests of honor at a show organized by Admiral Sir Edward Evans (Evans of the Bore), London Regional Commissioner. The King, with whom many of them had a friendly word, was King Haakon of Norway. The Prince was his son, Crown Prince Olav.

Tall and short, large—some very large—and small, beaming until their teeth, or lack of teeth, showed, came for an afternoon of fun. For a few hours they put down their scrubbing brushes and their pails—exchanged their aprons and smocks for their finest dresses and coats.

Miss Louisa Dean was there, she who had never been to London town before, although in all her 63 years she had lived only 15 miles from London Bridge. She came from Sutton, Surrey, where she has cleaned council offices for 16 years. A little shy—but she spoke up firmly when King Haakon stopped to ask if she was enjoying herself.

"Yes, thank you, Your Majesty. I'm having a lovely time," she said, standing up proudly in her net blue hat and brown tweed coat.

Mrs. Kent was there, too. Florrie Kent who hadn't been to a theatre since her husband died 46 years ago. With her faded flowered hat perched high on her head, her four-collared coat buttoned at the throat and her cane in hand, she sat in the front row of the stalls and thought the show a "scream."

Florrie is 77 and was the oldest char there. She met the Admiral and she met the King and had "the happiest afternoon in many a long year."

"I'm not an official char now, really," she said. "I went through the blitz with the others, but I'm retired. I'm getting on a bit for a full-time job. That's the trouble." She and Admiral Evans had quite a chat.

"Nice to meet you, sir," she said as she shook hands. "I hope everything in your line of business is doing nicely." It was the Admiral assured her and asked her how the cleaning business was going.

"Not so busy now we haven't those bombs about," she replied.

Yes, it was a proud day for Louisa Dean and Mrs. Kent and all those other gallant women who never faltered in their jobs and often raised a chuckle from the early morning workers in those days of bombing as they polished the knobs of a door from which all the windows had been blasted or washed down the doorsteps of a house whose roof was blown away.

Every time we walk through a store we see so many things we didn't know we wanted.

I. E. Goode - Editor & ManagerMODERN BUTTERMAKER MUST BE AN EXPERT

A comparatively few years ago the function of the Canadian buttermaker was to manufacture butter having good flavor, body, texture, and color, regardless of the percentage composition of fat, water, and salt in the product. The buttermaker of today, says the revised technical bulletin "Canadian Creamery Buttermaking", issued by the Dominion Department of Agriculture, is required not only to manufacture butter having good workmanship, but also to control the composition of his product within very narrow limits. Economic conditions demand that the moisture content be not less than 15.5%, while the sale of butter containing more than 16.0% water or less than 80% fat is illegal. The bulletin contains valuable information on all subjects pertaining to creamery butter making—Churning, washing, working and salting, packing and printing, cleaning equipment, loss of fat in buttermilk, churning records, defects in butter, and overrun, the last named being the difference between the pounds of butterfat in the cream churned and the pounds of butter made. It may be obtained free from the Publicity and Extension Division, Dominion Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

INSURANCE BOOKS ARE NECESSARY WHEN LEAVING PRESENT EMPLOYMENT

Carelessness and indifference regarding their insurance books are still too common among insured workers. Mr. W. H. Ross, manager of the Employment and Claims Office, stated recently:

Many of them fail to get their books from their employers when they leave their jobs to work elsewhere. Instead, they get new books from their employers and start all over again with their contributions. Others lose their books altogether and fail to report the loss to the Claims Officer so that it may be traced and potential loss of benefits avoided.

Every insured worker should realize that his unemployment insurance book represents real money—money from his own pay envelope and from his employer's bank account—money that should be available for him and for his family if he ever becomes separated from his employment.

Mr. Ross pointed out that every insurance book when it is issued is stamped with a serial number and that number is retained by the worker for the remainder of his working years. If, therefore, he obtains a new book each time he changes his employment, he stands to lose the benefits based on the record in the book or books first issued to him.

It must be clearly understood that the Employment and Claims Officer is the only one authorized to replace an insurance book that is lost or mislaid. Consequently, the insured worker who transfers his services from one employer to another should get his insurance book from his employer at the time he quits his job. If he is going to another job, he should take it to his new employer, who will continue the records of contributions on his behalf. If he has no job to go to, the book should be deposited with the Employment and Claims Officer at once.

The Australian wheat crop for the 1941-42 season is estimated at approximately 158,000,000 bushels, compared with 85,500,000 bushels in 1940-41.

BROOD SOWS NEED CARE

Next year Canada is expected to raise more hogs than ever before, and Alberta stands in a fair way to lead in swine production. Healthy, well tended brood sows will produce strong pigs and help Alberta farmers strike a blow for freedom.

While losses of young pigs cannot be entirely avoided they can be lowered through proper care of brood sows.

The following are a few reminders:

1. See that brood sows have plenty of dry straw for bedding. Pigs seldom suffer from cold if ample dry straw is placed in their shelters.

2. Place the feed trough about 60 yards from the shelter so the sows obtain exercise.

3. Water with the chill removed is best.

4. A good feed is oats 2 parts, barley 1 part, wheat 1 part. Equal parts of oats and wheat or barley is also recommended.

5. Supplements—Feed 10 to 15 pounds of milk daily per sow, or if milk is not available, 5 to 8% of tankage in the chop is recommended. Keep before the sows a mineral mixture made as follows: Slack coal 76 lbs., salt 20 lbs., ground limestone 3 lbs., iron sulphate 1 lb.

6. Potassium iodide—To 1 gallon of water add 1 oz. potassium iodide and feed daily to each sow 1 tablespoonful of the solution in the feed.

7. Green alfalfa hay in a small rack should be before the sows at all times. If alfalfa is not available, sweet clover hay is satisfactory or even green oat bundles will be relished.

WORLD HAPPENINGS
BRIEFLY TOLD

A Polish wing of the R.A.F. has destroyed 225 enemy planes over Britain and enemy countries.

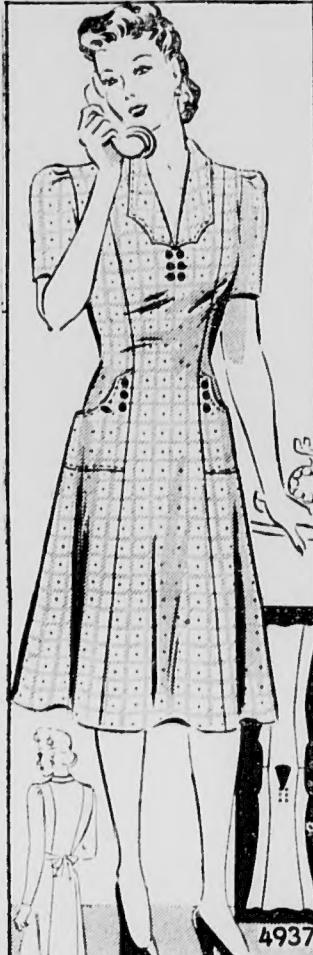

Sqn Ldr. Stan Turner, veteran of Dunkirk air fighting and the Battle of Britain, has been placed in command of a Canadian fighter squadron. It was announced.

Inauguration of a university air training squadron at the University of Manitoba to start next autumn was announced by Dr. Sidney E. Smith, president of the university.

Swiss now grow wheat in the parks and gardens of the League of Nations grounds at Geneva, Switzerland. Where statesmen once walked, farmers now sow the grain needed so desperately by Europe.

Three of the planes which dropped United States leaflets over France were captained by Canadians and five other R.C.A.F. airmen took part in the raid as wireless operators or rear gunners.

PRINCESS PANELS SLENDERIZE
By Anne Adams

Gone like magic are those extra pounds when you slip into this new, original home frock by Anne Adams ... and what woman doesn't want to look slim and neat at home? Pattern 4937 does the trick by narrow, up-and-down princess paneling both in front and in back that makes for easy sewing too! A half-belt in back assures a willow-waist. Don't you like the unusually-shaped collar and pockets? They would look very gay outlined with contrasting ric-rac, together with the short sleeves. Both the collar and pockets may be made of contrast fabric—buttons are a bright color accent too. For street wear you'll like a long-sleeved version of this dress in crepe or wool instead of cotton. Let the Sewing Instructor help you finish it quickly.

Pattern 4937 is available in women's sizes 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46 and 48. Size 36 takes 4 1/8 yards 35 inch fabric.

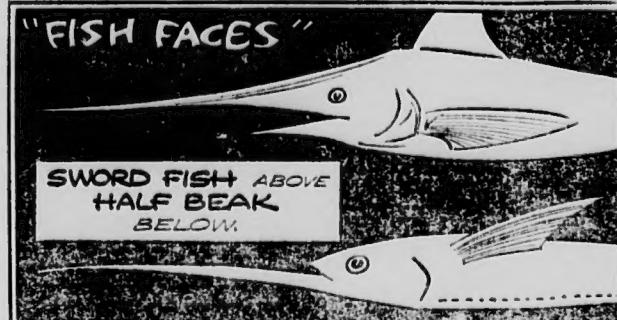

Send twenty cents (20c) in coins (stamps cannot be accepted) for this Anne Adams pattern. Write plainly Size, Name, Address and Style Number and send orders to the Anne Adams Pattern Dept., Winnipeg Newspaper Union, 175 McDermot Ave. E., Winnipeg, Man.

LIFE'S LIKE THAT

By Fred Neher

"Move over? . . . I will, if you say 'Please!'"

SO YOU'RE GOING TO DO A PLAY?

Research By Director

The director will be a busy person while waiting for the play books to come, making notes about this and that and the other thing. Pictures of the period must be looked up, old photos will do if it was within the last 50 years, of the period in which the play is set; pictures of the furniture, costumes, shoes and stockings, hair styles for both men and women, etc. Notes covering all these details must be made and on hand to answer questions that are bound to arise during rehearsals.

Stage Equipment

How big is your stage where your play is to be presented? Are the doors and windows in your scenery in the right place? Or must you build new scenery? Or are you going to use drapes? Or must you adapt your play to the present scenery? These questions must all be thoroughly discussed and arranged for before rehearsals begin. If it is necessary to use the present scenery and your doors and windows are not in the right place, then draw a sketch of your equipment to scale and plan your stage settings and furniture, entrances and exits accordingly. I know it will mean a lot of work now, but will likely save grief at a later date.

Your lighting problems should be considered at this time. If there are any special effects needed or desired, discuss them with your stage manager and give him time to think about ways and means of devising effects at the least possible outlay of money.

It may be possible to get your costumer to start thinking about where this dress can be borrowed (and changed to fit if need be), where that wig or old hat can be found, where a fan is stored away, etc. Time is a great element in keeping down costs of production. For those who are doing a costume play where bright colors are needed as in "Sunday Costs Five Pesos" use unbleached cotton to make the full skirts needed by the girls and make a paste as you would starch for the husband's shirts and add to this a little dye of the desired color and with an ordinary paint brush, paint on this mixture with the cloth spread out flat on papers on the kitchen floor. Let it dry and you have an excellent material for any colorful costume, either of the Mexican play or for the early English or Spanish court. The starch gives body and under lights, the effect is magical.

Rehearsal Space

If you are allowed to practise on the stage during your rehearsals you are indeed fortunate. However, many of us have to borrow a living room or an office and push back the furniture; then measure off a space as nearly the size of the stage to be used as possible. If not, measure space and use to a scale and arrange your furniture accordingly. This will prevent your cast from "blowing up" too far when the transition to the stage is made. Two kitchen chairs tied together will do for a couch for rehearsals, a box for a small table, a bench for a bigger table, a shelf for a cupboard, etc. Imagination is sometimes the mother of invention.

Simple Foresight Will Greatly Prolong Life Of Tires

Wise motorists will meet the restrictions on rubber with precautions against excessive tire wear. By taking thought, they can make the shortage of rubber bear less heavily on them. It requires simple foresight, in the way of driving at moderate speeds, having their tires checked periodically, keeping them properly inflated, and seeing that their wheels are in proper alignment. There is no telling how long it will be before tire sales can be resumed. Lengthening the life of those you already have is up to you. — Windsor Star.

Order Is Postponed

Vitamin-Rich Bread Cannot Be Obtained For Some Time

A two-month postponement of introduction of vitamin-rich flour and bread under standards approved by the Dominion government has been proposed by the Canadian milling industry because of the difficulty of making machinery adjustments and other changes, it was learned.

A meeting of representatives of the milling and baking industry was held in Ottawa recently when the whole subject was reviewed.

Vitamin-rich flour and bread under the government-approved standards was to have been placed on the market on Feb. 1 but the industry has found the obtaining of machinery and supplies required for the changes a major problem.

In addition to supplies, the industry is also concerned over the setting up of facilities for complete testing of the flour to see the vitamin content is maintained to the extent required by the standards.

Queen Elizabeth Was Impressed By Work Women Are Doing

The King and Queen returned from their tour of munitions and ordnance factories in the North full of admiration for the part women are already playing on the production front.

What impressed the Queen particularly was the way in which women in the tank factories have adapted themselves to heavy metal work, showing themselves as quick and capable as the experienced men they have replaced.

Another angle which specially interested Her Majesty was the "pool" system operating at several factories, by which the married women can take their days off at short notice to correspond with their husbands' leave period.—News of the World.

CHAPTER V.

Tamar's white dress sheathed her in its wraithlike folds as she leaned against the trunk of the big tree and waited for Ransome Todd to ask her. She knew that she was trembling, for in her heart she realized what he must say to her.

In his evening clothes Ransome still looked the part of an All-American halfback. As Tamar watched him through half closed eyes, she knew that he had caused the fluttering of many feminine hearts.

"Tamar," he said softly, "I want to ask you to forgive me."

She suppressed an almost uncontrollable desire to laugh. He wanted to ask her forgiveness for his kiss this afternoon! And she had thought—

Ranny continued: "I'm afraid that I was carried away with my indignation about Major Towne coming in to mine the Cricket Hill. You can forgive it, can't you?"

"Of course, Ranny. And I do think you were wonderful to go to Dick about it. I must thank you for helping us."

He took her hand and they wandered down to edge of the river. It lay shining like a stream of molten gold where the moon's path fell upon the water.

Ransome Todd's heart beat steadily. He wanted to take Tamar into his arms. He wanted to ask her to marry him, for he needed her desperately. Stafford would be heaven with this slender girl as its mistress.

His father had decided to retire next month. His mother had been dead for the last five years, and the two men were lonely there. They needed a woman's presence.

As they walked along the path that had been made by many eager feet along the bank of the Chestnut, Tamar's thoughts were upon their earlier days together. Many moonlit nights while their elders had sat talking on the verandah, she and Ranny had taken hands for courage, and followed the Negros' path to their meeting house in the woods.

"Ranny, this is just like the night that we saw Brother Bascom baptize Phoebe's twins. Remember?"

"Do I?" his laughter rang out. "Remember how solemnly we sat on the bench? And how you wanted Brother Bascom to get you some religion?"

"I remember that Phoebe jerked me by the arm and said that my folks would take care of my religion." She turned her face toward him. "The twins are doing all right in Birmingham. Lazarus has married and has twins of his own. Theophilus is running a burial society."

Ransome laughed. "Phoebe had a phobia for high-powered names. Aristotle for the last one!"

They lapsed into silence. They had shared so many childhood activities together.

"We'd better go back to the Lodge. I'm afraid we've not been very polite," she suggested. For the first time in their relation together, they felt the constraint that their ages had put upon them. They would never be just a boy and girl again. Now they were man and maid, and the white moonlight lay about them, coloring their world with romance and emotion. Tamar felt the wistfulness that accompanied her passing youth.

The rest of the evening went quickly, and it was late when Ransome drove up the winding drive to Shadwell. He was thankful that Dick was in his car, for that allowed him to see Tamar every moment of the evening.

It was a lovely dinner party," Tamar said as she allowed Richard to help her out of the car. "Selby, do drive over one afternoon this week." She smiled at both of them. "Good night."

The next morning Tamar was determined to corner her father at the breakfast table and confer with him about the new contract. The moment her eyes opened she remembered she had something important to do. She sat up and her long black hair fell in waves to her shoulders. She bound it up quickly with the blue ribbon that had fallen off in the night, and with a toss of the comforter, sprang out of bed.

Tamar closed her shutter and began her exercises. Just before she sped into the bathroom for her shower, she touched the long rope that hung from her ceiling. It was a reminder of the better days. She pulled the cord. That was her signal to Phoebe that she would be down to the little sunlit breakfast room to join her father in a few minutes.

She put on a blue linen dress and brushed her hair back quickly, but it sprang out defiantly in curls about her white temples again.

She ran down the long wide stairs. Her father was already at the table. She glimpsed the morning paper as she left the stairs.

"Hello, Dad," she said, kissing him.

He held her off at arm's length and smiled at her. His red cheeks were almost shining, and his blue eyes were the exact color of Tamar's. He hastily rose and seated her deferentially.

"Did you have a good time last night?" he asked.

She nodded. "Did you? You should have called Mums," she chided.

"I simply couldn't escape the major's clutches. I've made my apologies. Maris is eating her breakfast now, and we'll go up as soon as you're through."

Phoebe waddled in with a squat pitcher of batter to pour into the shining waffle iron, the only modern equipment in the room. "Morning, honey. Will you have a little sausage to go with that waffle?"

"Make it two, won't you, Phoebe. Please? I'm hungry this morning!"

"Musta had a big ebenin' wif Mist' Richa'd." There was nothing like a romance for Phoebe to ponder over and stir up into her household activities, to embellish at will. She rolled her big eyes at Tamar.

Tamar drank her orange juice and said, "Honestly, Phoebe, I'm ashamed of you. You're getting too old for romance. Let's see, your old man's been gone ten years now."

Phoebe clapped her hands on her hips and sniffed. "Yes'm, he lef' me wif Aristotle to bring up. He's even been dead five years." She laughed, her plump body quivering. "But talkin' bout romance, Miss Tamar, may be daid," she shook her head, "but Ah ain't!"

She marched toward the kitchen, her white head held high.

Tamar and her father chatted on for a few minutes, and then went upstairs to talk with Maris.

For an hour they discussed the new contract and the amount of the net percentage that the mine would pay them, over and above the cost of labor and equipment.

Maris Randolph was excited. Color had come into her pale cheeks, and Tamar knew that she was happy with the thoughts of all that the money would do for all of them, and for repair and upkeep on Shadwell. Knox Randolph did not tell them that the Major had not yet agreed to sign.

"There is one thing that we must do, Tamar," her father said, as they went into the study. "There is an old trunk of papers that are up in the attic. They must be sorted. I'm sure that some of them are about the Cricket Hill."

"Grandfather's papers were never carefully gone over. Of course, the main deeds, contracts, his will and so on were looked through. But we should have the original papers to make this deal legal."

"Would you like for me to put on some old clothes and go through the trunk? Two of the men can carry it down."

"I don't like to ask you to do it, but I have promised to go over to the mine this morning. It's dusty and you'll get your hands grimy."

Tamar waived aside his excuses. "It'll be fun. Perhaps I'll run across some of Grandfather's old love letters, and maybe a skeleton or two in the Randolph chest," she laughed.

"You're almost as bad as Phoebe," her father said.

Tamar was anxious to begin her task and going to work, knelt on the library floor, before the open trunk.

She masterfully sent Phoebe on her way back to the kitchen.

The papers were yellowed and a faint film of dust was over all. The hinges of the old trunk had rusted from disuse, and came open reluctantly. Tamar began systematically.

Horses. Auction sales. Old newspapers. Some of them dated when her grandfather was a young man.

One packet of legal papers was tied about with a heavy cord. In a flourishing scrawl the cover said, The Cricket Hill Mine.

The cord had to be cut, and the papers came apart. She placed them

How Rent Control Affects You —

as a landlord

AS a part of the general plan to halt further increases in the Cost of Living, the Government on December 1, 1941, extended the policy of the Price Ceiling to rentals for all commercial and housing accommodation in Canada. Generally speaking the new rental laws provide that:

(1) No oral or written lease for any commercial or housing accommodation (furnished or unfurnished) may legally be made after October 11, 1941, at a rental higher than the rental lawfully payable under the lease in effect on that date unless an application for increased rental has been made to and approved by a local Rentals Committee of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board. Such an application must be based on specified circumstances arising since October 11, 1941.

NOTE: Land and premises used solely for farm purposes are not subject to rent control.

(2) A tenant is entitled to a renewal of his lease unless the landlord requires the premises for certain reasons named in the Board's Rental Orders and has given the tenant a written notice to vacate within the time and in the manner prescribed therein. If this notice to vacate is contested by the tenant, the landlord must secure a Court Order for possession.

(3) Copies of all Rental Orders and Regulations of the Board and application forms for rental variations are available from any of the regional or sub-offices of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board, and, in areas where such offices are not yet established, from the Clerk of any County or District Court or local Rentals Committee.

VIOLATIONS of these orders are punishable by law and should be reported in writing to the Prices and Supply Representative Regional Office, Wartime Prices and Trade Board, at the nearest of any of the following cities: Vancouver, Edmonton, Regina, Winnipeg, North Bay, London, Toronto, Brockville, Montreal, Quebec, Saint John, Halifax or Charlottetown.
